

Say Hello to your very own book of Quotes

QuotationsBook

Quotes by Vaughan, Henry

from QuotationsBook.com

Henry Vaughan (April 17, 1622 - April 28, 1695) was a Welsh Metaphysical poet and a doctor, the twin brother of the philosopher Thomas Vaughan.

Man hath still either toys or care: But hath no root, nor to one place is tied, but ever restless and irregular, about this earth doth run and ride. He knows he hath a home, but scarce knows where; He says it is so far, that he has quite forgot how to go there

- Vaughan, Henry

They are all gone into the world of light, and I alone sit lingering here.

- Vaughan, Henry

Caesar had perished from the world of men, had not his sword been rescued by his pen.

- Vaughan, Henry

So stick up ivy and the bays, and then restore the heathen ways, green will remind you of the Spring, though this great day denies the thing, and mortifies the earth, and all, but your wild revels, and loose hall.

- Vaughan, Henry

QuotationsBook